DECLARATION

OF INDEPENDENCE

When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

do hereby declare their independence of Great Britain, that they are free, sovereign, and independent States, absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connections between them and the said Kingdom are hereby totally dissolved; that the Prince, the Bishops, the Nobles, and the Commons of Great Britain, being the only legitimate representatives of the said Kingdom of Great Britain, are hereby declared to have abdicated the said office, and that they are not entitled to any such office, nor to any power, authority, or jurisdiction in the said Kingdom of Great Britain.

That the United States of America, having declared their independence of Great Britain, and having severed all political connections between them and the said Kingdom, do hereby declare that they have no other object in view than to secure their peace and safety, and to establish a firm and lasting friendship with the said Kingdom of Great Britain, and that they are determined to maintain the same, and to defend the same, against all attempts to subvert the same, and to restore the said Kingdom to its former state of dependence.

That the United States of America, having declared their independence of Great Britain, and having severed all political connections between them and the said Kingdom, do hereby declare that they have no other object in view than to secure their peace and safety, and to establish a firm and lasting friendship with the said Kingdom of Great Britain, and that they are determined to maintain the same, and to defend the same, against all attempts to subvert the same, and to restore the said Kingdom to its former state of dependence.
